

ABSTRACT

A method for fabricating a liquid crystal display (LCD) device is disclosed, in which an aperture ratio is increased by reducing an area of a drain electrode which applies an electrical signal to a pixel electrode of a pixel region. In the LCD device, a contact hole where 5 the drain electrode of TFTs is electrically connected to the pixel electrode is formed over predetermined portions of the drain electrode and the pixel region.